

John Weir

The National Park: owned by many private landlords.

Dartmoor National Park, like other UK National Parks is of special value to the whole nation, because of its great beauty, its wildlife, its cultural interests and the opportunities for enjoyment, but its not nationally owned, it's in the hands of many different landowners, whether it's the National Trust, the Forestry Commission, and of course several hundred farmers own significant tracts of land and then individual owners as well, so here's the Park and we just own this little chunk.