Planting the trees at Soussons.

Six of us planted 640 acres at Soussons, you know where Soussons is? Well six of us planted that in 1949, and you'd never believe the stuff we ploughed up there, arrow heads and all sorts, yeah, we ploughed it with a prairie plough, that was a, oh, it would go down about two feet that one would and he'd [make] a lovely big furrow and we'd plant the trees in the furrow and of course where the plough went water would drain away so it would drain the water at the same time, and we used to plough up all sorts of things, arrowheads, axe heads and loads of it went into the Plymouth - in the museum.

So you saved all the bits that you found?

Yeah we saved loads of it, yes, yes there was some very good arrowheads, yeah, proper job.
