The legend of the Hairy Hand.

And a local doctor called Dr Helby from Princetown was driving his motorcycle and had two of his children in the sidecar when he was forced off the road, so his children said, they didn't say what forced them off the road and unfortunately Dr Helby died but his children survived. Now, not long after the fatal accident of Dr Helby an army officer was again riding his motorcycle along that stretch of road, very close to Higher Cherrybrook Bridge, when he was actually forced off the road, but he survived and he told the tale that a big, big pair of large hairy hands gripped over his, on the handlebars of the bike, and it literally overpowered his hands and forced him off the road.
