

John Thorp

Smoke blackened roof timbers and thatch.

What [is] fascinating here is that not only are the timbers heavily sooted from the open hearth fire but so are the common rafters, the thatching batons and indeed the under layer of thatch.