

Rose partridge

Memory of the yard during the 1930s.

And what do you remember about outside in the yard?

Oh its totally different, totally different – there was a cobbled path down beside of the other cottage with a dung heap in the middle of the yard, there was little sheds; Grandma used to keep chickens in one of those - and an ash pit in the corner where they used to put all their ashes from their grate, and in the bottom there was a pig's house where they kept pigs and a big thatched barn, there used to be great big doors in the middle of it.
